American Women, American Citizens: 1920–1948
NEH Summer Institute for K–12 Teachers at New-York Historical Society
July 13–July 24, 2020

What did it mean to be an American woman from the 1920s to the 1940s?

Explore the many ways women legitimized their role in American society amidst economic extremes, social and political upheaval, and war during this two-week institute for K-12 teachers in New York City. Engage in lively discussion with 13 renowned historians and participate in hands-on pedagogy sessions featuring dynamic primary sources that bring diverse women’s voices to life.

Institute Co-Directors:
Leslie Hayes, Director of Education at the New-York Historical Society
Nick Juravich, Assistant Professor of History and Labor Studies at UMass Boston

Institute Faculty:
Zaheer Ali, Juan Castellanos, Erin D. Chapman, Marcia Chatelain, Julie Golia, LaShawn Harris, Cheryl Hicks, Brian Jones, Elaine Tyler May, Ruth Milkman, Michele Mitchell, Mae Ngai, Vicki Ruiz, and Joanna Scutts

Participants will receive:
• $2,100 stipend to help defray institute costs
• Books, curriculum materials, and course pack
• Certificate of completion

Application Deadline: March 1, 2020
Learn more and apply: www.nyhistory.org/neh

Any views, findings, conclusions, or recommendations expressed in this program do not necessarily represent those of the National Endowment for the Humanities.